BODY:

The Ambassador Bridge owners filed a lawsuit in July against the mayor and city councillors seeking $125,000 from each, over a few accusations. Many taxpayers have been holding their breath since then, waiting for what happens next.

Everyone knows that the current mayor and council love discussing serious business behind closed doors. Unanimously, the motion to bill taxpayers was passed later in the evening on the public part in the Monday meeting.

Obviously, the city taxpayers will reimburse all the money over accusations of misfeasance, conspiracy and unlawful interference as deliberate conduct for the purpose of obstructing and preventing to build a second span by the Ambassador Bridge.

The similar lawsuit was filed against the city by the Boarded Up Houses Demolition Action Group, led by Hilary Payne, and this is a fight that prohibits the demolition of boarded-up houses in the west end.

So more money will be on the hook for taxpayers to cover the next legal action, thanks to the negligence of our mayor and his council pawns. He said, not that long ago, that he has to protect the citizens from higher taxes and make them safe.

Everybody knows that the state of those houses has been in danger and there is a big safety threat to people still living in the neighbourhood.

Mr. Mayor, the damage to the people of Windsor has been done and will not continue if the voters will make the right decision Oct. 25.
